Zapping-you Whenever Thoughts Flow

I would build a building and call it a “church.”
I would put a cross on the building.
I would add other decorative features to make people feel religious.

I would create “religious” learning institutions called seminaries.

I would hire a pastor who graduated from my institution of learning. You see, I need to create an aura around my ministers. They need to appear to have a special hotline to heaven. That way, the sheep will follow. I need the sheep to think that these institutions have access to truth that the common person doesn’t have. That way, the sheep will follow their pastor, who graduated from my school.

I would hire an assistant pastor.

I would start a Sunday School.

I would create a Youth Pastor position. If I can get the children, I’ve got the parents.

I would implement programs for singles and married couples.

I would write a doctrinal statement which included the Trinity and Eternal Torment.

I would hire a music director or “Music Pastor.”

I would advertise using statements like, “If you’re looking for a church home ...”

I would make people think that the greatest problems in the world are due to bad morals. These morals would be artificially contrived, of course. I would make them up myself. This would suit my ultimate purpose, because people focused on morals are man-centered rather than God-centered. They would be so proud of their morality that they would have no time to consider the true implications of the cross of Christ. Grace would then be eliminated. Whew! I can’t have people thinking about Christ and His accomplishments.

I would use every technique possible to appeal to women. Much of the above would already appeal greatly to women. I must get the women at all cost, because if I get the women, the majority of men will surrender.

I would emphasize words like “love,” “diversity” and “acceptance.” These words and concepts would attract millions of people, especially women. Since I have effectively feminized so many men, the men will put up no resistance. My emphasis would be humanistic love. God’s definition of love will be lost. Truth will take a back seat. Truth will be replaced with sensual feelings.

If I were the devil, all this is what I would do. All these things would prevent people from reading Scriptures properly ever again. People will assume my organization to be based on Scripture. They would never figure out that the whole system was invented by me! The followers of the Apostle Paul would then look like inconsiderate, arrogant, and unloving radicals—just like their Apostle. They will go unrecognized.

I would win. ■

The Romans series will resume next weekend.
